It is finally here!

The report featuring the profiles of prominent experts is ready. To say that much has changed would be a huge understatement. Recent years have been an extremely challenging time for all of us. This includes entrepreneurs, marketers, and social media managers alike who had to embrace and navigate the new reality.

That’s even more reason to look for guidance, authorities and experts you can trust.

In our view, this report will be more useful today than ever.

Over the last few months, we have monitored the activity of several hundred marketers. We watched their work and the buzz around their personal brands – both in terms of the content they create and how their audiences react to it. In this way, we created a list of dozens of experts based on data from Brand24 and our own observations. Therefore, without a doubt, the people on this list are, in our opinion, the best in the business. We certainly haven’t included all the great people in the marketing industry, but rest assured the ones you’ll “meet” on the following pages are absolutely top-notch.

We want to promote and refer you to those who create the highest quality content. To those who provide inspiration and are able to skillfully build a dialogue with their audience using social media. Ones that will help you deepen your expertise and build your brands more effectively. And you’re about to check it out for yourself – each personality delivers amazing marketing content. Each in their individual form, but all at the highest level.
We divided the list into two parts. In the first part, we highlighted the top 30 people who have been outstanding in recent months in terms of their activities, content creation, and community engagement. The second part, in which you’ll find the top 70 people, has no numbering. Qualitative and quantitative analysis showed that these individuals’ knowledge and inspiration are undeniable.

However, some of the people mentioned in our report got the same scores in our evaluation and therefore appear ex aequo. You can read more about the methodology and our evaluation tools in the next chapter. The last 70 influencers come without a number next to their positions. This is because their scores were too similar and, based on their online activity, the differences were so subtle that ranking them could be too ambiguous. Nevertheless, we assure you all of these influencers are worth following!

We are sure that every name is a guarantee of professionalism that will give you proper guidance in the marketing industry. After all, this is what we need most today, when there is so much communication noise.

In addition, we added some valuable articles to the report. You will learn from them how to build effective influencer campaigns and what mistakes to avoid. There is also a surprise waiting for you: a list of tools with a very cool bonus.

We believe this report will be a valuable source of inspiration for effective marketing activities. Our aim is to support your work and if we succeed – we will be pleased.

And if you want to share your thoughts with us – go ahead! Write to us at top100report@brand24.com.
Methodology

Our report is unique in terms of quality. Presenting a list of popular names can be relatively simple, the real challenge is to have hard data to justify the choices.

This is the challenge we take on in our report (this is its fourth successful edition). And what has always distinguished our report is that we prepare it based on numerical and qualitative data. That is what we have done this time as well. We monitored several hundred names over the period of 12 weeks, and some of them are people we have been following for years. We collected information on what content the experts published, how often, and in which media.

The list consists of a thorough selection of influencers we are monitoring, but the essential part is our own AI solution we use at Brand24 daily. We used the Presence Score as a deciding factor when selecting the influencers and their appearance order.

Presence Score is our original metric for measuring a brand’s or topic’s (or, in this case, a person’s) online popularity. Our users use it in the Brand24 app to measure brand awareness, and it’s been proven to help evaluate marketing and PR efforts.

The Presence Score metric is calculated based on the number of in-app mentions and their total reach.

As a result, we are confident that we are serving you a top-quality list of experts who not only provide us with quality knowledge in the broad field of marketing, but also brilliantly build their personal brands.

How to run a successful influencer marketing campaign?

Working with influencers can, and often does, yield sensational results. Find out what you can do to make sure your campaign achieves its goals.

Alicja Mękarska,
Partnership Manager at Brand24
It’s easy to find articles and reports on the web about how amazing the results of influencer marketing are. And that’s great, because such results are within your reach. However, the question is how to really achieve them. The following tips will certainly help you with this matter.

1. Define your goal

You certainly know what you want to achieve. Your targets are already set in your marketing strategy or at least in your goals for this year and quarter. However, it’s one thing to define broad targets for your business, and quite another to set specific goals for your influencer campaign. To define such a goal, sometimes you have to take a few steps backwards. If you want to attract more customers (what a surprising goal for a business!), you need to think about where your brand is at.

If your recognition is low, this is the step you should focus on in the first place. Or, on the other hand, if your recognition is at a satisfactory level, think about the state of trust in your company and about the associations with your brand. If they’re not entirely positive, it’s the warming up of your image that is worth working on with an influencer. Look broadly and act as precisely as possible.

Below, you will find suggestions about what objectives a campaign can fulfill. At the same time, I would like to point out one very important thing – unless you operate in the FMCG industry, sales as such may be a too ambitious of a goal. Remember that the more expensive and/or less known the product, the purchase path will be correspondingly longer and the influencer promotion will be only one of its elements.

- Increasing brand recognition
- Building greater trust in the brand/positive associations
- Presenting your product offer (especially when you are launching a new offer or the segment is not well known among your audience)
- Sales
- Retaining existing customers (reassuring them that they made the right choice)
2. Define your target group

You most likely know who you want to reach. However, think about this in the context of working with an influencer. Perhaps this is the moment to divide your target audience and direct your message to some of them? I assume that you will partially (if not entirely) focus on social media. However, let’s not forget that different people are present on Instagram, TikTok and YouTube. Although these groups overlap, they are rarely 100% identical. This will be even more different when you use an influencer’s image in traditional media. Focus on who you want to speak to within your specific activities and how many audiences there are to engage. My suggestion would be that the more specifically you define them, the more effective your actions can be.

3. Identify the right influencer for your campaign

Identifying the right person to work with is one of the biggest challenges of influencer marketing. Why is it so complicated? Because you need to target not only the people who are able to reach the desired audience, but also those who will have a real impact on them. Numbers are not always a reliable indicator. A creator may have many followers not because he or she enjoys their respect and trust, but because the content arouses a lot of emotions (not always positive), provides entertainment (but at an average level), shocks, etc. That’s why numbers are not always a clear indicator of who is worth working with. I suggest you use tools such as Ambassador, Grin, CreatorQI or Hype Auditor. They will help you find the right person or group of people in a particular category. However, it will always be up to you to do the most important part of the work, that is verifying what these numbers look like in practice.
So check the following:

- What exactly does the selected person publish: does the quality, content, language, frequency of publication resonate with your brand?
- Whether and what kind of engagement they create: is the audience sharing and commenting the content – if so, what do they say?
- Is the influencer credible in your opinion (or is their channel a collection of ads)?

These are the basic issues to think about. If a particular person meets your requirements based on these criteria, it is worth making an offer of cooperation. However, remember that what you propose should bring value to both parties. You want to achieve something, and the influencer will probably want to show their audience something of value. Think about this as well.

4. Choose how and where to reach your audience

You already know who you want to reach and, at this stage, you should already know who will help you with this. It is time to think about the communication channels. At the outset, determine whether you will be using the image of the influencer in your ads or you want to be present in the creator’s feed. Secondly, think about where the audience described above is most active by paying attention to the influencer’s activity. Perhaps you’ll only focus on Instagram (stories and a regular post), or you’ll mix it up with a Facebook post or a blog post. Are your potential customers really there? Think broadly and act narrowly so that the actions are best suited to expectations. The way of promotion determines its form in a natural way. On Instagram Stories, you will focus on a film and graphics, while TikTok is mainly about making a short video with subtitles. A video on YouTube allows your actions to be a little wider. Don’t use the same form for every person and medium. You need to be flexible and listen well to what is happening in the market in your industry.
5. Establish the rules of cooperation

Contracts, contracts and more contracts. It’s not about a lack of trust, it’s about confidence and peace of mind. On both sides. A contract is a guarantee of implementation in your desired form and its precise definition. This gives clarity about the expectations of both parties and guarantees a satisfactory implementation of commitments. For each cooperation, the contract must be prepared individually in consultation with your lawyer. I encourage you to take into account the following elements:

- Time, date, and form of execution of the order (who provides the material, who specifies its content, and to what extent)
- Place of publication (blog, Twitter, Instagram, other?)
- What must appear in the publication, what should be described (your product or service, specific feature, advantages, terms of purchase, promotional campaign)
- What cannot and should not appear in the publication (e.g. the product should be shown against an attractive background and in an optimal context, it should not be shown in a bathroom etc.)
- Non-competition (responsible influencers know this, but it is worth including a ban on promoting competitors’ products, e.g. for three months after promoting your product)
- Content approval (everything that will be published should be known to and accepted by you before the world sees it)
- Agreeing whether and to what extent you can use the influencer’s material and image
6. Coordinate activities on an ongoing basis

Stay on top of every detail! The content was created by the influencer and published after your approval. Your role is to check what is going on around the publication. There may be compliments – be grateful for them. Or maybe questions will come up – be there to answer them first. And what if someone is complaining? You should be there first and react to dispel any doubts. This gives your audience a sense that you are thinking about them, responsibly nurturing relationships and keeping your customers and leads happy. Social media and digital marketing as a whole is an incredibly vibrant environment. Be ready for it and step in when the situation demands it.

7. Use influencer content for promotion in your channels

Have a look at the last item pointed out in the paragraph discussing the contract. If you agreed with the influencer that you can use their image and/or posts in which they mention you – do it! Take pride in the fact that this person speaks well of you. This is a classic application of social proof, which has enormous impact. Share posts, promote articles, show the world that someone they know and like appreciates you.

8. Verify the effects and optimise

Collecting the results of influencer marketing will be the second most difficult task in your campaign – right after choosing the right person. At this point, go back to your goal – was it to raise awareness? Then you will measure effectiveness, for example, by the increased number of visits to your website or profile and the number of mentions in social media, as well as the influencer’s reach for that particular post. If you are focusing on sales, it certainly helps to assign a discount code to the creator and then check in your CRM how many times it has been used. The most important thing is that in 90% of the time the results of influencer marketing don’t come over the night. Check Google Analytics, number of fans and likes, enquiries, form fills, comments. Collect and overlay data – only then will you get a real picture of how well you did. Check the effects on an ongoing basis and, if possible, improve your subsequent actions. Good luck!
Do you want to build your brand, strengthen your position in the market, gain new customers and nurture the existing ones? This sounds natural. It looks like you need to make sure you communicate effectively. Check these brilliant tools out.

The choice of them was not random. During their selection we were guided by the topic of influencer and partnership marketing. We focused on making them as helpful as possible in creating campaigns and strategies, social media management, partner selection and also to help nurture relationships.

PS. We have something really special for you at the end of this article.
Managing all media communication can sometimes be overwhelming and time-consuming. Fortunately, there are really good solutions to address this challenge. First of them is Prowly. It is a comprehensive public relations management tool that enables you to send information to the media from one place, maintain a press office and a visually attractive brand journal.

Also keep in mind the importance of having a social media presence. It allows us to communicate more efficiently with both existing customers and leads, present our product offers and reach a much wider audience. However, it is worthwhile to improve your actions, especially when it comes to more than one social network.

SocialBee is an excellent social media management tool for posting across all accounts – Facebook, LinkedIn, Twitter, Instagram, Pinterest, Google My Business and TikTok – from a single platform. Starting with content creation (with the Canva integration), scheduling (in a calendar-like view), publishing, and all the way to analysis – SocialBee makes your content marketing a smoother, more streamlined process.

The second tool that will improve your social media activity is NapoleonCat. It offers a full stack of social media management tools for small and growing teams. In the Social Inbox, you can track and reply to messages, reviews and comments (including comments to Facebook and Instagram ads). You can even automatically reply to repetitive questions and delete spam. The tool’s multiple collaboration features also allow you to easily delegate tasks and facilitate the approval process.
OK, so you already have a pretty good base for your efforts. Now, you have to remember how important email marketing is in building your brand. Check out the cool supporters we’ve prepared for you!

Woodpecker

If you’re looking for an intuitive cold emailing tool, Woodpecker will be a hit! Woodpecker helps B2B companies connect with prospective customers and business partners – and keep the conversations going. Use it to create relevant, personalised email sequences and automatically send them from your email address directly to your recipient’s inbox. You can also follow-up automatically in the same thread. The sequence is automatically stopped when someone replies or schedules a call via Calendly.

GetResponse

Another solution that will help your messages reach the inboxes of your subscribers is GetResponse. The really cool thing is that it combines some great features in a single platform. It is powerful, yet simple marketing automation software that helps you grow your audience, engage with customers and boost online sales. GetResponse can help you achieve your goals as a truly professional partner – without the need for high email marketing skills or tons of your time. With over 30 tools included in a single easy-to-use platform, you can transform your online marketing experience and achieve tangible results.
Newoldstamp

Sending emails is one thing, but it is also worth taking care of their aesthetic side. And Newoldstamp can help you with that. It is a powerful email signature generator that allows businesses to create, customize and deploy beautiful and personalized email signatures across the entire company. A standardized email signature can create thousands of sales opportunities every day with every email sent. Thanks to Newoldstamp, you stand out of the crowd, which is one of the biggest challenges today. Sounds good, doesn’t it?

BuzzSumo

And what about content marketing? We can all agree that it responds to real user needs. It helps them solve their problems, inspire, engage, and sometimes entertain. This is how your brand gains credibility, trust and more solid leads in the long term. That’s why it’s worth investing in a tool that will allow you to monitor user engagement and follow current trends in content marketing. Buzzsumo gives you exactly that. BuzzSumo.com is an online analyser that allows you to find out what content is performing best in your industry and has the most influence in it. It will certainly help you identify the topics that attract the most attention and at the same time are related to your business.

Social media and email marketing are really important, but these are not the only areas you should cover in your marketing strategies. Get to know the tools that can make your everyday efforts way easier.

Demio

If you haven’t been offline for the last few years (and especially the last two) you’re probably aware of the importance of online meetings, workshops and webinars. If you want or need to schedule online events (especially webinars), Demio is here for you – it will make it easy for you to create them.
It is a cloud-based solution designed to help businesses create, launch and manage live, automated or recorded webinars, making it easy to engage both prospects and customers.

You need to know that only Demio provides a simple, no-download webinar experience for your audience, as well as all the marketing tools you need to generate better results.

Upfluence

Influencer marketing is a hot trend (this is one of the reasons you’re reading this report) but what’s the most important is that it can help you get the most out of your brand. If you’re looking for a tool to help you make and maintain positive connections, collaborate, and track accurate results, Upfluence is the answer. It is a cloud-based influencer search and management solution designed for agencies of all sizes. We’d like to emphasize this because many similar apps are dedicated only to big market players. Upfluence thinks about all of you! It offers influencer marketing, affiliation management and performance-tracking functionalities within a single suite.

PartnerStack

The last but certainly not least is PartnerStack! It is an affiliate marketing platform that helps businesses by maximizing the benefits of partnering and collaborating with other affiliate marketers to increase sales, leads and conversion. PartnerStack promotes brands and provides better support to affiliates by allowing businesses to partner with leading SaaS companies such as Bambee, Brand24, Hello Bar & Subscribers, Spocket, GenM, Buzztime, Freshdesk, SalesHandy, Insense Ads, Inc., GoDaddy DBA Sellbrite and many more.
